Bill Armstrong

Dear Friend,

As U.S. Senator for Colorado, I fought many battles in Washington. Today, as a private citizen, I am asking you to join me in combating a very grave threat now facing our State and its people.

As you are probably aware, militant homosexual activists and their liberal supporters have launched an aggressive statewide campaign to force you and me to condone and give our State's legal blessing to aberrant homosexual behavior and lifestyles. These tragically misguided people have one goal:

> To secure for their "sexual orientations" the same legal (plus additional) rights, protections and privileges now enjoyed by legitimate racial, ethnic and religious groups.

I am writing on behalf of Colorado for Family Values, to ask your help in stopping gay activists from achieving this goal. Colorado for Family Values, a newly-formed organization of concerned citizens, has already achieved major victories by:

1. Defeating a proposed Colorado Springs ordinance granting "protected class status" to gays, lesbians and bisexuals.

2. Halting passage of a proposed State "Ethnic Harassment Bill," which would, among other things, have made it a felony crime for church pastors to preach against homosexuality.

3. Devising America's first plan to stop special "gay rights" by voter initiative a plan so innovative that it has secured the support of prominent Colorado civil rights leaders and gained national attention as a model other states are now following.

But militant homosexuals are not deterred by these setbacks. In fact, they have achieved victories of their own:

- In December 1990 Governor Roy Romer issued an Executive Order granting special status to gays in State agencies.

- Gay and lesbian activists succeeded in getting a special "gay rights" ordinance passed in Denver, similar to the one defeated in Colorado Springs. A referendum drive by Denver citizens failed, by a narrow margin, to repeal it.

- The Colorado State Civil Rights Commission (whose former head also chaired the State's most prominent special "gay rights" activist organization) voted to create and promote special "gay rights" legislation throughout this state.

P.O. Box 190 • Colorado Springs, Colorado 80901

How have militant gays made such inroads into our state and local governments? Claiming this is a "simple civil rights issue," gay extremists have played on the political sympathies of legislators to gain the reward of special rights and protected status. Their deceptive arguments boil down to this:

> Gays have suffered emotional torment because society disapproves of their behavior. Therefore, society owes them protected class status to redress their injuries and make them feel better.

First, gays already have the same recourse under law as the rest of us against physical assault, libelous or slanderous verbal abuse and injury to their property. Second, to equate the self created miseries of pleasure-addicted gays -- who sport average incomes of nearly $55,500 a year -- with the innocent sufferings and crippling poverty of legitimate minority groups is an insult to those who've struggled to achieve true civil rights in America. Third, sexual behavior alone has never been a reason to grant civil rights protection. Nor should it be. Tony Marco, one of the Founders of Colorado for Family Values, has put it well:

> "If having sex becomes all it takes to be considered `ethnic' with full rights and privileges, the very concept of ethnicity will lose nearly all its meaning and value."

What will happen if gays achieve "ethnic" status and special rights? Quite simply, Colorado citizens of all kinds will be deprived of their civil rights. You'll lose your freedom of speech and conscience to object to homosexual behavior. Your church or business may be forced to hire gays. If you are a landlord, you will be compelled to rent to gays, regardless of your moral convictions. If you are a day care center owner, you will be forced to employ homosexuals and lesbians. Lest you think I'm overstating the impact of special "gay rights" legislation, consider the recent consequences of such laws in other states:

- In Madison, Wisconsin, two heterosexual women refused to share their apartment with a lesbian applicant. Under a city "gay rights" ordinance, the two women were fined a total of $1,500, required to write letters of apology to the applicant, assigned to attend "sensitivity" classes taught by lesbians, involving graphic depictions of homosexual behavior, and were forbidden to ask later rental applicants about their "sexual orientation."

- In 1989, in Laguna Beach, California, a 9-year-old boy was frightened by seeing three gay men having sex in a public restroom. The City Council refused to act on the complaint of citizens disturbed by this outrageous event. Having a gay mayor, and a special "gay rights" ordinance, Laguna Beach did not see fit to investigate and prosecute this incident.

- Recently, the Minneapolis Roman Catholic Archdiocese was assessed $20,000 in damages and $15,000 in fines -- for refusing to allow a homosexual club to hold meetings in church owned facilities.

Is it possible Colorado's people could face nightmares like these? It is not only possible, but probable if special "gay rights" laws are passed. Militant gays have made it clear in their writings that they have no use for the traditional family, for traditional moral standards, for traditional religion. Nor do they seem concerned about the health crisis which may result if homosexual extremists succeed in forcing society to accept their promiscuous behavior. (Surveys of gays by gays show that homosexuals average more than 500 lifetime sexual partners.)

Gays are by far Colorado's most active communicators of sexually transmitted diseases. Though no more, probably, than 2% of our population, homosexuals are responsible for 85% of our State's AIDS cases. (More than four-fifths of these originate in Denver alone.) Caring for one AIDS patient from infection through death costs about $250,000. AIDS and its consequences will cost America billions of dollars in 1991 alone -- of which Colorado will pay its share.

And you and I will pay, too, with higher health insurance premiums and hospital costs, exorbitant legal expenses and even higher taxes. Incredibly, despite their affluence, militant gays are demanding that taxpayers pay their health care bills -- robbing the handicapped and true minorities of urgently-needed care and benefits as well.

But legitimizing special "gay rights" would exact a far greater price of our State than mere dollars. Doors would open for gays to make even deeper inroads into every public and private institution including our schools. Denver public school teachers and counselors are already being trained to teach our children starting in Kindergarten -- that homosexuality is a normal, healthy lifestyle.

Clearly gays' influence will grow even more rapidly if responsible citizens like you and me allow militant gay activists to successfully promote civil rights protections for themselves.

What can you and I do to stop them?

Under Colorado law, citizens may gather petitions to place initiatives on election ballots, to be decided by public vote. This is the course Colorado for Family Values has taken to defeat gay activists. On July 31, 1991, Colorado for Family Values filed proposed ballot initiative language with our State's Legislative Council. The initiative was authored and reviewed by some of America's most noted Constitutional attorneys.

On March 20, 1992, CFV submitted more than 85,900 petition signatures in support of this initiative to the Colorado Secretary of State's office. If approved by voters in the 1992 General Election, this initiative will amend our State's Constitution to prohibit protected class status based on "gay" orientations. It will nullify all existing state and local laws giving gays special class status. It will make future attempts by militant gays to pass new special "gay rights" laws pointless.

Thus, one decisive move by concerned voters like you and me can eliminate the threat of protected status for homosexuals. But before achieving victory, Colorado for Family Values must still:

1. Enlist an "army" of concerned citizens to help carry out a massive, statewide educational campaign exposing the true aims of militant homosexuals and the impact of their legislative efforts. Public education is critical to the initiative drive's success.

2. Conduct a statewide drive to register and get to the polls enough Colorado voters to make sure CFV's initiative gets the YES vote into Colorado's Constitution in November, 1992.

To move forward toward these crucial goals, Colorado for Family Values must raise $100,000 in the next 90 days alone. That is why I am asking for your immediate financial support today. Colorado for Family Values depends solely on individual, voluntary contributions. Success or failure in this effort depends on people like you who will take a stand for family values. Will you please help?

You can contribute with confidence. I have known many of CFV's leaders personally for years. They are men and women of great integrity. Their intention is not to take away a single right homosexuals share with the rest of us. Their primary concern is protecting family values, traditional morality and legitimate civil rights for all Coloradans.

Please mail your contribution today. Your gift will help launch extraordinarily effective action, because CFV's special non-profit status allows this organization to directly interact with Colorado's system of government. Thus, you can take great satisfaction in knowing you have played a truly vital role in protecting those values which we cherish, and for which we have labored so long and so hard.

Sincerely,

Bill Armstrong

William L. Armstrong

P.S. Despite their claim to be "oppressed," gays are among Colorado's most affluent citizens. They have indicated they'll spend at least one million dollars in an attempt to defeat Colorado for Family Values' initiative. Our only hope for victory rests with God -- and with responsible citizens like you and me. Thank you for giving generously.

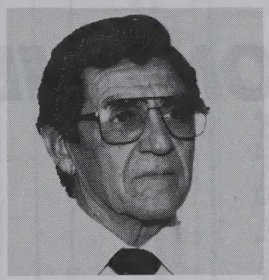
WHAT THE PEOPLE ARE SAYING

Cynthia Cordle, Administrator, R.N.

"It is appalling to think that a selected lifestyle would qualify a group of individuals for special consideration. I do not support any kind of recognition for them as a specialty group."

William A. Berg

"I endorse the efforts of CFV's proposed Amendment 2. Condoning protection for sexual orientation is both politically and morally unjustified; it would not result in fairness, but do just the opposite."

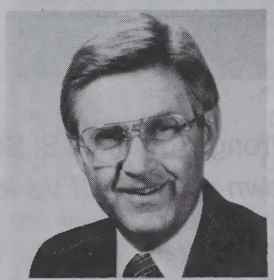


Ignacio Rodriguez, Colorado Civil Rights Leader

"A 'Yes' vote on Amendment 2 will maintain the integrity of true minority protections by not allowing sexual orientation protected status."

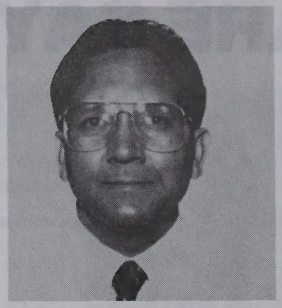
Tikyra Angelique, Student, UCCS

"As a University student, I was horrito find that professors were using their classes to promote the homosexual lifestyle. That's wrong, and we need Amendment 2 to put a stop to it."



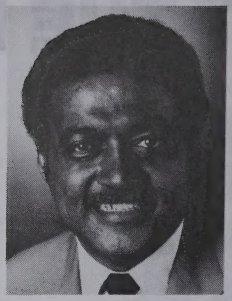
Will Perkins, Perkins Motor Co.

"In my 47 years of business expereience, sexual orientation has never been an issue. Should homosexuality be given some special status, it would be a hornet's nest of problems for business people."



Tom Duran, Interested Civil Rights Activist

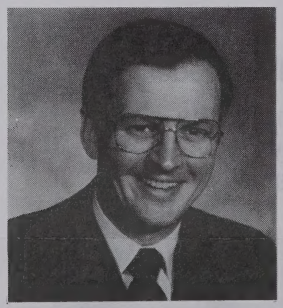
"Sexual orientation is not an under-privileged class needing protection. It is a powerful special interest group."



Ed Jones, Businessman

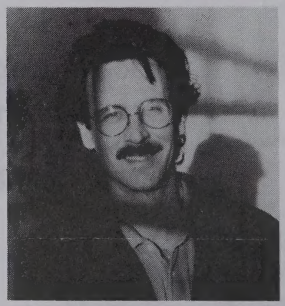
"As an American of black heritage, I resent the concept that a lifestyle could be considered as the basis for special privileges."

VOTE "YES" ON AMENDMENT 2



Bill Armstrong, Former U.S. Senator

"I have known many of CFV's leaders personally for years. They are men and women of great integrity. Their intention is not to take away a single right homosexuals share with the rest of us. Their primary concern is protecting family values, traditional morality and legitimate civil rights for all Coloradans."



Stephen Bransford, Novelist

"Imagine there's no Amendment 2. Imagine our weary courtrooms flooded with gays demanding the special privileges of truly oppressed minorities. Imagine the perversion of justice."
